GOSPEL REFLECTION

For the generations who listen to this gospel in the presence of the physically absent Jesus, the last beatitude that Jesus addresses to Thomas is our greatest hope: "Blessed are those who have not seen and have believed." It is to hand on such life-giving faith, says the evangelist, that he has written his gospel. In his Asian Journal, Thomas Merton wrote: "Faith means doubt. Faith is not the suppression of doubt. Is it the overcoming of doubt, and you overcome doubt by going through it."

Christ took his wounds into the grave and did not disown them in his resurrection. Because of his wounds, Jesus is now credibly in touch with wounded humanity: with the wounded in body and spirit, those hurt by society, the victims of domestic and global violence, those suffering from their own addictions, those abused by our disregard and complacency. And we know only too well our own woundedness. Such wounds reveal our need for one another and, therefore, the potential for the building of a compassionate, healing community that witnesses to the love of the Wounded Healer.

In today's gospel, Jesus tells the disciples, "As the Father has sent me, so I send you." Where are you being sent to share Jesus's peace?

SESQUICENTENNIAL PRAYER

All praise to you, O Sacred Heart,
To whom God's grace does now impart
Comfort and peace which overflow
And inebriate us who love you so.
Confer a blessing with your grace,
Sanctifying this holy place.
For one hundred-fifty joyful years,
Sustaining peace has dispelled our fears.
Together, we honor all our priests,
Both those living and deceased.
Protect and favor the love we share
And souls commended to your care.
We pray O Merciful Lord renew
Our Sacred Heart family, We Trust In You.
